Did you know?

Social isolation can negatively impact health. Studies have found that a lack of social connections can increase the risk of death by at least 50% or more.

Simply connecting with friends can boost brain health and lower the risk of dementia. Many other benefits of an active social life include better physical health, a stronger immune system, and increased feelings of well-being.

CaptionCall helps you manage your overall health by staying social. You are more likely to be social knowing you can communicate with confidence using the CaptionCall phone.

Take the anxiety out of communication by fully utilizing the phone features beginning with the touchscreen display, a unique and powerful feature of CaptionCall.

The touchscreen display shows the text of your captioned telephone calls.

You never have to guess what the caller is saying because every word is displayed on the screen. In addition, the display shows recent calls, contacts, and saved calls. CaptionCall is your social connection to all of your contacts. Make a plan to stay socially connected for better health in 2018.

Living with hearing loss.

You might feel no one understands living with hearing loss—how it affects your quality of life, limitations it presents, or compromises you must make daily. In reality, there is someone feeling exactly like you among the 20 percent of Americans with some degree of hearing loss.

Would you be surprised to learn there are many celebrities with hearing issues? It's true!

Whoopi Goldberg cited years of listening to excessively loud music as the cause of her hearing loss (she now wears hearing aids).

Robert Redford suffered a severe ear infection from avoidable water exposure during filming of a movie, which permanently damaged his left ear.

Bill Clinton ignored his high-frequency hearing deficiency for years and now wears hearing aids.

These famous people have lived life in the spotlight and enjoyed productive lives despite hearing loss. Whether personal choices or unforeseen circumstances affected your hearing, you can make the best of it by utilizing many of the tools available to those with hearing loss.
